

Canada's oil and pipeline dilemma, in pictures

Facebook and other forms of social media have been full of jokes, complaints, suggestions and comments regarding Canada's oil and pipeline dilemma. Here are a few that caught my eye...

The first set of pictures is about the controversy over the Canadian pipeline. Quebec is so concerned with the potential danger of a pipeline running across Canada, yet their politicians were quite willing to dump tons of raw sewage into the St Lawrence river near Montreal last summer. I agree with Henry:

The next set bemoans the fact that we are importing foreign oil at exorbitant prices instead of benefiting from Canadian oil. How does that make sense?

This last one is probably the most upsetting, another inconvenient truth as titled, showing how insignificant the CO2 emissions from the Canadian Oil Sands are compared to those produced by other countries around the world:

All of these pictures make you wonder, don't they?

Please be sure to visit my other blogs:

Laugh out loud (LOL) with me at YOUR DAILY CHUCKLE

and be inspired and motivated by famous words of wisdom at Wow

My gardening website can be viewed at www.gardens4u.ca